Muranese glass-making tradition

The island of Murano has been the homeland of original art glass since 1291, when the Republic of Venice decreed that all glass-making activities were to be confined to the island, for two main reasons: to avoid the risk of devastating fires, and to make leakage of trade secrets much more difficult.

The top-secret techniques for glass manufacturing have been passed down from generation to generation since then so that ancient Muranese techniques have remained unchanged over the centuries.

The essence of timeless beauty come to life thanks to experienced and capable hands, of artisans and artists at the same time. And the glass becomes alive, acquires prestige and charms the viewer, becoming objects and unique pieces that have no equal in the world
